How does Aglow “help restore and mobilize women?”

Through mentoring and encouragement, Aglow helps women foster a deep relationship with God which in turn promotes healing and restoration. Aglow wants women to rediscover their God-given power, beauty and purposes, and this is done through relationship with their creator. To mobilize is “to gather together, to activate, to assemble.” Since 1967, Aglow has been investing in and developing women to become servant leaders in their communities. A quick phone call to an Aglow woman in any city, state or country and Aglow is mobilized to meet a need or respond to a crisis.

How does Aglow help Muslim women?

As followers of Christianity, Aglow works to show Muslims the love of God as portrayed through the gospel, while also exposing radical elements of the Islamic faith. Moreover, many women in the Muslim world do not enjoy even the most basic of human rights. Aglow labors to give these women a voice by participating in organizations such as the Knesset Christian Allies Caucus Women's Council which rallies against abuse of women and petitions governments around the world to help elevate the status of women.

Are there men involved with Aglow?

Yes. Men around the world are joining Aglow because they believe in Aglow's mission.

Aglow has a 40-year history. What are they doing in the future?

For years, Aglow women overseas have been actively involved in works of compassion, empowerment, and training as part of their evangelistic efforts, specifically in refugee camps and war-torn nations. A subsidiary of Aglow International has been incorporated for humanitarian and compassion purposes called Aglow Relief, which is in the process of applying for 501(c)(3) status with the federal government to give Aglow's international leaders entrée to funding sources in their respective nations.
