

Plaintiffs Dismiss Lawsuits Against Daystar Network, Marcus Lamb

FORT WORTH, Texas, Dec. 8, 2011 – Three women who previously filed employment law claims against Tarrant County-based Daystar Television Network and its founder, Marcus Lamb, have dropped all of their lawsuits. The plaintiffs will not receive any financial compensation, either individually or for attorney fees, as a result of the litigation and will have no right to re-file.

“We are pleased the lawsuits against Daystar and related defendants have been dropped and that this resolution involves no payment of any kind to the three former plaintiffs or their attorney,” says Arnold Torres, business administrator for Daystar. “We believe the decision to permanently drop these lawsuits without compensation confirms the true nature of these unfounded allegations and vindicates our position in fighting these claims. Marcus and Joni Lamb and the entire Daystar family are grateful for the overwhelming support received from so many during this difficult period.”

With the dismissal of all of the claims of Jeanette Hawkins, Karen Thompson and Jennifer Falcon, and without Daystar receiving any financial compensation, the network has agreed to drop its own lawsuit brought against the three individuals in Tarrant County. This action formally ends all litigation associated with the parties.

The Daystar Television Network is an Emmy award-winning, faith-based network dedicated to spreading the gospel through its Christian programming that reaches approximately 100 million homes in the United States and 670 million homes in more than 200 countries across the globe.
